

Reading Diary Expectations

The children have dated their work at the start of the week.

An adult at home has written a comment about their child's reading and the support they may have offered at home.

The children should write a short narrative about what they have read at least four times each week.

The child, a parent and the teacher have each signed the diaries when each of the expectations have been met and the children have completed their work.

The children have practised their spelling words brilliantly.
